

1. What values do you seek to uphold in your political life?

I seek to uphold fairness, integrity, and independence. A judge's duty is not to serve a political party or a personal agenda, but to ensure that every person who enters the courtroom is treated with dignity and respect. I believe deeply in equal justice under law — that our system must protect the vulnerable, hold the powerful accountable, and apply the same rules to everyone, regardless of background or circumstance.

2. What are your policy priorities, should you be elected?

As a judicial candidate, I cannot promote or oppose policies or legislation. However, within the scope of the court's responsibilities, my focus is on administering justice efficiently, transparently, and compassionately. I aim to ensure that cases move through the system in a timely manner, that people understand the process, and that the court functions as a place where fair outcomes are possible. I also value problem-solving approaches, such as diversion and treatment courts, that address root causes of crime like addiction and mental health — programs already authorized within our judicial system.

3. What role do you believe the USA should play in the world?

That's a question better suited to those seeking legislative or executive office. From a judicial perspective, my role — and that of the courts — is to uphold the Constitution and the rule of law, which are the foundations of our democracy.

4. Which of your positions are particularly relevant to youth voters?

Young people are often the first to recognize when systems aren't working as they should. I hope they see in my candidacy a commitment to transparency, accountability, and empathy in our courts. The way we administer justice today shapes the kind of community young people will inherit tomorrow.

5. Which of your positions support students and faculty at colleges and universities?

While I cannot take positions on specific policies, I am committed to a justice system that encourages learning, dialogue, and respect - the same values that sustain strong universities.
