

Who are Writing Fellows?

Writing Fellows are students who are either currently training or have already trained to work as Writing Center consultants. Recognized as strong writers, Writing Fellows are recommended to the Writing Center Director by faculty members. All Writing Fellows have completed English 3256: Peer Writing Consultation.

Who should consider working with a Writing Fellow?

You may want to consider a Writing Fellow if you:

- Assign writing
- Want to provide your students with an opportunity to learn from their peers
- Enjoy collaborating with other faculty and students
- Wish to help students improve their writing over time
- Favor analytical/argumentative/content-based writing development over grammatical/mechanical/technical skills acquisition
- Facilitate effective peer group work

What can Writing Fellows do for my students?

Specially trained Writing Fellows can:

- Model successful collaboration strategies
- Model successful writing strategies (such as glossing, clustering, mapping, etc)
- Hold follow-up consultations with your students in the Writing Center
- Become "writing resources" for your students
- Conduct mini-lessons on writing (such as citation issues, avoiding plagiarism, thesis development, etc)

How can I request a Writing Fellow for my class?

- Contact Peg Peoples, Director of College Writing and the Writing Center
- Writing Fellows are assigned on a first come, first served basis
- Writing Fellows' availability is subject to their class schedules
- When requesting a Writing Fellow, please include the following information:
 - Your name
 - Class (course name and number)
 - Time of class
 - Place (location of class)
 - Number of Writing Fellows requested (exact number assigned will be based on availability)
- The Director of College Writing will contact you to confirm availability.

For more information, contact. . .